ULIETEA, one of the Society islands in the South see. This island is about a llegoso in circuit. Its productions are plantains, cocoon nuts, yams, hogs, and fowl; the two latter of which are scarce. The soil on the top of one of the hills was found to be a kind of time marks; on the sides were found some scattered flints, and a few small pieces of a cavernous or spongy stone lava, of a wishlic colony, which seemed to contain some remains of iron, so that it may possibly be here lodged in the mountains in a great quantity. Nothing was seen on this Island to distinguish either its inhibi- tants, or their manners, from the other neighboring slands. The first Europens who landed on this shore were Mr (now Sir Joseph) Banks and Dr Sander; they were received by the native time and courrous manner, reports concerning them having been their bar- bingers from Otahteite. Everybody seemed to fear and respect them, placing in them at the near time the st- most confidence: behavior as if conscious than their visitors possessed the power of doing them mischief with out a disposition to make use of it.
