through the children of James. He accordingly wala- drew to Scotland, but left behind him his two fans. The Lord Hume and the Earl of Huntsy were likewise diferentes. The former had brought his men into the field's but, according to four Scotts Bolivian with a defeat rather to better than to fave James but Huntley, though he dislad his matter's conduct, remained firmly attached to his perform.

The election or backwarded of that great men formed to make an important upon James. He has chosen a frong camp in the neighbourhood at Fork on the fate of a moment called Poddishally, and he was transported from the English army by the river Till. This advantageous finition put the end of Surry durd dergrate difficult to it renders the Scottish army inaccessible, as it was fortified by artillery, and was now well together with with previously the change of its formation. The Earl does we a martially, which he charged Rouge Crock herself, who was attended by a tromper, is contained from people for an ex chance of prisoners, which means to have been calculuel to give this July Ford the more credit with James but concluded with responsible for his jurisdiction arra-fion of England, and a defence to James to fight him in general battle. The Israel was further charged with a verbal committee in sequence James, that the Earl of Surry had filled orders that no quarter should be given to any of the Scotch army but the king himself.

Aconom if was ever called on this section, in which the Earl of Huntsy and others made frong remonthances against a general aggregatements. They flewed how their truth has the Scotland, should it prove unfuceful and that the wife't course James could folow was to return home where, if he was part of the enemy, it is could fight to great advantage. The Earl of Huntsy, however, added, that his opinion should be determined by that of the large and cowardly, and that that was equally ready to them in his majetly's lan-ger as his glory.

Hundry and the other noblemen were opopled by the French amhafador, who represented a retreat as diffi grached to the military of Scotchal and the one of James's and died near romantic arguments of the James kind, which he too not failed with the king of dipsion. According to Drummond, the council went of opinion, that the king should immediately believe Berwick, but he that all will, the majority of them were certainly of opinion, that it was because the display of James to fight the fact of Surry but that nobleman's rea-quisition, and that James could help a human bye turning home. Patrick lond Linday of Tyres, mentions in a former coleering, and who was preferred the council, especially handful of fireproofly on the head, that James, in a paffon, is laid by the historian Lindafy or have done, that it even liveted to return Scotland, he would bring that nobleman at his own gate. He ordered Rouge Croca to the called it; and after transition him with green palmere, he first a artifice to the Earl of Surry by one of his own heads (likely), supporting that she would give the English battle on the Friday following; and that had to re-ceived fach a melfage from the real even in his own cattle of Edinburgh, he would have left that, and all other beliefs to have forg him. With this metings

The cut of Surry, who was then to inform that he started about a claim or charter, had borders that James would return an enforce by one of his own hereals, but unwilling that he should obtain any knowledge of the Studies of the English camp, he ordered proper portions to receive him at two miles distance, where foon after he attended himself for profits. They account his commifully without paying much respect to the perfon of the English general j who differ milled him, after letterkwing great promotional upon the honour courtesy of James. The act thus ordered his army to match in the line of battle towards YWicholson. There is wayfinding by Rose Croix, heral, who gave him an account of the frong fitsartion of the Scotchith camps, but the advanced path of the English army came then within three units of these countries, and the cut of Surry found his difficulties and just primarily. The roads were broken, the feel-ling of the rivers cut him off from the necessary conmemations for applying for a army, and nothing but a battle could face time either than being abandoned or destroyed.

Jans seems to have to far regarded the advice of his wife countllors, as not to abandon his frong fit-tuation. They recaboured to perfection him, that it is sufficient guard to his homemos, if he did not eline the battle on the day appointed; and that his engagement did not hold him to tight upon hiscirants against ground. The Scotts, the front lines, keen of their enemy difficulty and, as Drummond elegantly specific is, they remembered to their King, that he lacked nothing but patience to be welcome. The Nhim ro. Scott also lying on the defensive, the cut of Surry son can again fear Rouge Come to inform James that he said, ready to give him battle. James was family settled at this same impuntions upon his homens, and yethings was normally forced for having followed the next advice of his oblemean. It is certain, from the bell authorities, but he helped the sacrificefly operations for providing the paflages of the Till, which the English croffed, partly at a place when it was available, and partly at a village. We are told, not without a great experience of possibility to while the English were pulling the belodge. Bothwhile, made of the Scotch military, ill up on his knees, and begged permitted from Jame to point the reasons against the bridges, but that James werered him in a position, that if not be at the peril of the (Borthwick's) head, and that he was refived to fee all his enemies that day on the plain before him in a body. The cut of Sorry, after pulling the Till, took potifie of Bonzorn, which lay to the right of the Scotch army and by that situation even off the remembrantion of his enemies with the Tweed, and commanded the Till below Roscook! The Scotch general fav themselves now in danger of being reduced to the man drama in which their enemies had been involved two by before, and their country open to an invasion of the English army. James had feret intelligent that this was set from being the intention of the English armed and beginning that the latter's intention was to take poiffition of a frong camp upon a hill between him and the Tweed, which would give the English a farther command of the country, he received to be force
