Bucnity. There are four different ways of turning one's list in favouring. You may do it in this way: Turn the palm of the right hand outwards, extend the arm in the fame manner, and make a contrast movement with the left hand and left area then, by a gradual motion, incline your head and whole body to the left field, and its evolution will be behind. Then is another way which is one fillt. Bend your head and body toward that file to which you are going to turn. If you wish to turn to the left, include the thumb and the right hand toward the bottom, bend the fingers of the right hand, ifted it can, and it for driving my the eyeer files, or, which is the same thing, for pulling yourself the contrary way. At the time time, with your left hand, the fingers being click, path the water behind you, and all it once the year your body and your face to the left, and the moment we will be accomplished. If you will to turn on the right, you wait do with your right hand what you did with your left, and with your left what you did walk your right. You must be careful when turning yourself never to flyeted out your legs, and be done that the work be to deep deep yoube in no danger of hurting yourself.

(A) An interesting question occurs here, which deferves to be considered. Since the body, when spread upon the farlets, can be tipperd with a little exertion, and frequently without any an alt, as in feminning on the back, how does it in and shine a portion when drowned filled the frequently begin again from time intervals." The reason is this: In the art of drowning, the lungs are filled with water, and consequently the body, being specifically heavier, risks. It is well known that the human has constant a great quantity of air? We are far in full compelled by the world, and which this is the cold the body remains at the bottom. Just as soon as the set by its elasticity endeavours to dilengage lifelf from the comporffon, the body is fvelled and expunded, becomes facifically lighter than the water, and consequently rides to the top.
